
Death of Robert Tomlinson.

Robert Tomlinson, one of the early settlers of Washington township, father of Allen, Noah, Milton, and Levi, and a highly respected man and citizen, after a protracted sickness, died at his home on Saturday last. We regret that we have not at hand the data from which to write an appropriate obituary, and hope some friend acquainted with the main points in the history of his career will supply the deficiency at an early day, that more may be known of a life so rich in events. "What Next," our excellent Westfield correspondent, writes under date of 4th instant: "Our community this morning sustained a great loss in the death of one of our oldest and best citizens, Robert Tomlinson, who died this morning at five o'clock. Deceased was eighty-four years old. He was a patriarch indeed and his large family who have long since arrived at manhood and womanhood were near at home to comfort him in his last illness. Everybody knew grandfather Tomlinson to be a good man, and few persons have more to show as the result of the labors of a long and busy life not in property alone, but he has furnished to society a Godly example, and his sons and daughters are classed among our best men and women."
