Robert Tomlinson and his sons were enterprising men They supplied apples to the workers on the National Road, transported sugar to Indianapolis, and use the profits to buy an improved plow 1849 the boys helped Robert to build the first successful steam sawmill the lumber from that sawmill was used to construct the White River Bridge at Noblesville. - [Note 40: page 250: Tomlinson, "A Biographical Sketch of the Life of Noah Tomlinson (1824-1918)," 5. This places the Tomlinsons in the supply network of the first major railroad boom in Indiana. According to Richard E. Wood ("Evangelical Quaker Acculturation in the Upper Mississippi Valley, 1850-1875," Quaker History 76:2 [Fall 1987]: 129), the decade between 1850 and 1860 saw a jump from 228 to 2,163 miles of railroad track in Indiana.]

Milton and Noah best known as road builders helped to built the road that is now US 31 through a swamp

1860s Milton and Noah helped to extend a gravel road from Westfield to Indianapolis

By the 1880s Milton and Noah had been a part of the construction of roads and railroads that connected Westfield to markets throughout the country

Milton and Noah remained farmers but they were far more than that simple title.
